

This is the Sharing of Necessary Work to be Done to Stem the Tide of Destruction we are experiencing. 12/Mar/2021. JSB280 Engaging Men.

Queensland University of Technology, 1st semester, 2021.

Unit convenor: Dr Michael Flood.

Overview.

This unit explores the field of efforts to work with men, across such areas as domestic violence and crime, parenting and care work, and sexual and reproductive health. In Australia and internationally, there has been rapid growth in programming and policy focused on men and boys and aimed at building gender equality, fostering health, and ending violence. This unit will equip students with a comprehensive understanding of the 'engaging men' field, the elements of effective practice, and key challenges and directions in this work. The unit is relevant for careers in health, welfare, and social services, crime and justice, education, social work, public health, and other areas of policy, programming, and advocacy.

Content.

The unit is organised into three modules:

1. Men, masculinities, and gender: How are men's lives shaped by gender norms and gender relations? This module introduces men and masculinities and explores how masculinities are linked to areas including health, parenting, and violence.
2. Working with men: This module examines contemporary efforts to engage men in such areas as violence prevention, health promotion, and families and parenting, both in Australia and internationally.
3. Issues and challenges in engaging men: This module explores key issues including engaging men in positive change, working across diversity, dealing with resistance, and evaluating our work.

My Reply to Dr. Flood. Brilliant effort Micheal. Looking forward to the details of the course content as it develops.

Donald D. Berment,

The Spiritual Before The Personal.

Michael, I have been thinking about your Engaging Men Unit, pioneering effort to reach society, men in particular.

This is the second time Australia has stepped forward in the Academic Domain to chart new directions.

Their Practice Based PHD Programme being the first.

I can be wrong, but to place such importance on Parenting in an Engaging Men Unit, speaks volumes about your understanding of what is a Primary Need to instil, in preparing our future citizens to survive in a society with its presence violence against women and men, causing so much pain and suffering.

In the Cloud Archive of Men Against Violence Against Women (MAVAW), you have the link, there are bits of information you may find interesting as Suggested Reading Material for your students. Our proposal for a BSD Syndrome Model to replace the Duluth Model, our Parenting Without Tears Desktop Published Textbook, Part One and Part Two, using an Attention Model to raise children without violence, our Domestic Violence Awareness Desktop Published Handbook, Part One and Part Two, to gain insight into Domestic Violence, are the three that comes quickly to mind.

To date 196 Uploads to this Archive are available for free download and sharing, all created on Evidence Based Research, over 4 decades of work effort, standard copyright rules apply.

We in Trinidad and Tobago have a Department in our University of the West Indies, called The Institute for Gender and Development Studies (IGDS). Their Web page unfortunately, only recognize Men's Organisations, which are Feminist, Pro feminist or as one Clinical Psychologist identifies himself, a Recovering Patriarch.

This Unit in its 25-year history, has never found any man suitable to be put on their Board of Directors and always have mixed students of men and women. Needless to say, like so many Tertiary Education Schools, nothing on Parenting to allow graduates to perform at their balanced best when they join the World of Work.

One female Masters student complained to me that the female Lecturer to Grade her Thesis, told her to rewrite a Chapter in it, when she spoke glowingly of her beautiful personal relationship with her brother and father, or it will be failed.

Some radicalism still exist today, and I have high hopes that Units like "Engaging Men" will challenge such radicalism, in the most peaceful manner possible, in all Universities worldwide as they develop.

Even our United Nations CEDAW Committee, (Committee For the Elimination of Discrimination Against Women), has never had a man suitable enough to sit on its Board for its 25 years existence.

Keep up your good work brother. The Standard which you can set with Australia's and probably the World's First "Engaging Men's Unit," is a light at the end of our Violence Tunnel.
